Draw a map of Europe...

...and highlight all of the countries that were part of the Roman Empire. You could really challenge yourself by researching their Latin names!

Create a mosaic

Romans are well known for their mosaic art. You could cut up squares of paper, or do it the Roman way by using little tiles made out of flat stones. You might need an adult to help you with that one!

Design a new uniform for a centurion or a gladiator

What materials would you use? Would they have access to these materials 2,000 years ago?

Visit London's Roman Amphitheatre...

...where animals, gladiators and prisoners all fought to death in front of thousands of people. London's own colosseum...

Research...

...ancient Roman emperors. We will be learning about one or two, but there are lots more!

Visit your local library

Thousands of books have been written about the wonders of Ancient Rome. Why not take a trip and learn some new facts? 5 dojo points for anyone who can teach me something new!

Write a poem based on the Romans

The Romans left behind a legacy,
After igniting a war.
There's lots I could write about,
But you'd do a better job, I'm sure...

Keep a food diary

Record what you have eaten over the course of a week and reflect on how healthy you have been. You could present your diet in a chart, and compare it to the foods Romans ate.

Create a non-chronological report about the Romans

Include your favourite facts, draw pictures to bring the information to life and show off all of your knowledge.

Create your own number sentences using Roman numerals

Can you challenge yourself to use all 4 operations?

Research and make yourself a Roman outfit

With a laurel wreath, you could transform yourself into a mighty emperor! Or fashion yourself some new sandals. How about making a centurion's helmet? You'll need plenty of red feathers.

Research, design and build a Roman aqueduct

How will you secure your structure together? Which materials will make the strongest bridge?
